

 THE KENAN
INSTITUTE FOR ETHICS PRESENTS: THE 2007 KENAN DISTINGUISHED LECTURE IN ETHICS

The Dignity of Difference: How to Avoid the Clash of Civilizations

In an age of extremism, how can religion be a source of peace rather than conflict?

Chief Rabbi Sacks is “a towering figure in the intellectual life of Britain today... [H]e relates the insights of religion to the modern world and retells the story of faith in a compelling way, and that is a rare and remarkable achievement.”

—Prime Minister Tony Blair

Sir Jonathan Sacks is the Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth. A philosopher and theologian based in London, the Chief Rabbi has played a leading role in advancing dialogue among competing cultures. Through his frequent broadcasts and his regular newspaper columns, the Chief Rabbi has reached wide public audiences on the central problems facing modern civilization in an age of globalization, cultural conflict and challenge to tradition. He earned his doctorate in philosophy at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, and is an honorary fellow there and at King's College London.

Cosponsored by:

The Office of the President
The Provost's Common Fund
Jewish Life at Duke
Duke Chapel
The Divinity School
The Department of Religion
The Franklin Humanities Institute
The Department of Philosophy
The Sanford Institute of Public Policy
The Fuqua/Coach K Center of Leadership & Ethics (COLE)
The Samuel DuBois Cook Society
The Trent Center for Bioethics, Humanities, and History of Medicine
The Gerst Program in Political, Economic, and Humanistic Studies

CHIEF RABBI SIR JONATHAN SACKS

Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 2007 • 5:00 PM

Reynolds Theatre, Bryan Center
Duke University