Over the summer, the Campus Culture Initiative--a group 25 of administrators, faculty, students (including myself), and alumni--has sought to answer just that question. Now, it's your turn to take a crack at it:

What do you want Duke to be?

What (if anything) is wrong with undergraduate culture? Does Duke have a drinking problem? Is there sufficient intellectual engagement among undergraduates? What influences gender dynamics at Duke? What role should athletics play in undergraduate life? Are we still struggling with racism and prejudice on-campus? What would we like to change about Duke?

Your voice will be heard--we simply cannot answer all of those questions in isolation. The conclusions that the CCI comes to will have lasting influence on everything from undergraduate judicial policy to the practices of the admissions office to the role of athletics at Duke. This is how you can get involved:

- 1) Sign up to attend a small group discussion at <http://www.campuscultureinitiative.duke.edu/>
- 2) Submit a comment to the committee at <http://www.campuscultureinitiative.duke.edu/>
- 3) Send email to campus-culture@duke.edu
- 4) Contact any of the undergraduate members of the CCI:
----Trisha Bailey ('07)
----Melissa Mang ('09)
----Chauncey Nartey ('07)
----Iman Washington ('07)
----Elliott Wolf ('08)
- 5) Reply directly to me and I'll pass your comments along to the CCI.

This is your place. What do you want Duke to be?
